

My story:

My obsession with backpacks and more:

When I gained admission into nursing school in 1994, we placed 3 students in a room. I remember walking to the residence with a backpack. In the backpack, I had a bar of lux soap, a tin of sardines, and a few toiletries and a few clothes and nursing uniforms. The backpack, lux bar soap, and tin of sardines were a gift from a friend/ sister, Aggie. May God continue to bless her. How the stay unfolded would be a topic for another time. While others were dropped off with beds, mattresses, fridges, cupboards, etc, I walked to the place one weekend, about 5-10 minutes walk. That was all I could bring.

Now, why I am obsessed with backpack and more. Completing that course gave me independence and the opportunity to help others. Therefore, I always think of getting a backpack and all other items that I feel may help others in various ways, especially in Ghana.

Sankoboa gives me a better platform to assist more individuals effectively, going by Sankoboa's mission.
